hassanali hajati*,

City, as one of the human achievements, always has been considered as important matter but the beginning of 19 century, paying attention to urban problems formed into new shape. As new rapid increase of population, industry and technology contributed to expansion of cities, thus development of cities body not only affected by natural factors but also by abnormal ones. Urban management include city administration in order to improve stable management of urban regions in local area while considering national, economic and social goals of the country. Today, urban management in the world has been changed fundamentally and in fact, cities are being managed in order to provide Welfare and comfort for residents. This research, analyzing the authoritative sources and field research and physical development of the city, examines the role of urban management in realization of city development plans of the Some-Sara in different periods. Also, determining factors influencing it and its spatial and spatial effects have been identified to be effective and useful in orienting and organizing the expansion of the city. The results of this study show that although Some-Sara has necessary potential for suitable and basic physical development also has suitable spaces to do this, but its physical development is not in acceptable and management role was not effective enough. at the same time it has been able to produce and execute programs in the central planning and improvement projects of the physical environment of the city.
