

Relationship between Child- parental conflicts and attachment styles with attitude to delinquency among female adolescents

Maryam Adib Ghodsi*, Dr. Ghorbanali Yayhaee,

The aim of current research was to determine the Relations between Parent- child conflict and attachment styles with Attitude to Delinquency in female Adolescent. The research method is correlation. Research statistical population is consisted of Female high school students of Rasht city in academic years of 2015-2016. In this study, 335 female students were ed by random cluster sampling method and responded to fazli Delinquency questionnaire, Collins & Read attachment styles questionnaire and Strauss Parent- child conflict questionnaire. The gathered data was analyzed by SPSS Software using Pearson correlation and stepwise regression analysis. Results of this study showed that there exist a positive and significant relations between verbal and physical aggression of parents with Attitude to Delinquency ($P>0.01$). There exist a negative and significant relations between reasoning and Attitude to Delinquency ($P>0.01$). There exist a positive and significant relations between insecure attachment style and Attitude to Delinquency ($P>0.01$). There exist a negative and significant relations between secure attachment style and Attitude to Delinquency ($P>0.01$). Also regression analysis showed that Physical aggression, reasoning and secure attachment significantly predict 41 Percent of the variance of Attitude to Delinquency in female Adolescent ($P>0.01$). The findings of this study highlight the importance of family and attachment in explaining Attitude to Delinquency of female Adolescent, thus in Delinquency prevention programs these factors should receive special attention.

Keywords : Keywords: Attitude to Delinquency, Parent- child conflict, attachment style, Adolescent.

