
Analysis of the geopolitics of ethnic groups in Guilan province and its impact on social security (Case study of Talesh city)

seyedeh hajar mohamadi*,

Abstract Efforts to achieve security were perhaps the most important motive for community verification in the long run of history, while social factors after a long time are a far greater danger than natural ones to threaten security. In this research, we have tried to identify one of the threats to society for security, which is ethnic diversity, and to look at the results for peace in our lives. The goals that this scholar can accomplish in this way can be the analysis of the political geography of ethnicity and its impact on social security, which has been analyzed with a descriptive and inferential description. With regard to the planning of the enemies and the arrogance of the arrogant people in order to create differences among different ethnic groups in Iran, which would result in a satisfactory outcome for the Islamic State of Iran, it should also provide an antidote to the wound of the enemy's Kane that has been ineffective to achieve that antidote. It will not be possible except through cultural enhancement, such as common customs and customs, as well as filling opportunities and threats together. Keyword: Social Security, Identity, Ethnicity, Political Geography, Tension
