

The Study Of Composition In Attar'd Divan

kobra fatollahi*,

Abstract In the Persian Language, different methods are used to create new words with diverse meanings, combination is one of which. In the combination, by putting together two or several words, a new word is created which transfers a different meaning compared to its original components. Since the poems of poets are an enriched treasure of words and vocabularies, by studying these poems, new and diverse constructs are obtained in the combination of words. Therefore, this research aims to extract different types of combinations in Attar poems through a descriptive-analytical method and obtained results showed that Attar used two adjectival and nominal compounds in his poems. among adjectival compounds, the shortened present participle was mostly used and also, new and diverse constructs such as “past participle noun” in adjectival compounds are novel examples of Attar. In nominal compounds, noun noun compounds were mostly used by Attar. Keywords: Grammar, combination, adjectival and nominal compounds, Attar.
