Abstract Dividing and merging companies are two important and complex entities in the corporate law. The expansion of two or more business companies when it is done to either dissolve another company or eliminate two or more companies and establish a new company But decomposition is the result of the division of assets and the separation of a company between two or more former or new companies, which is said to be a company separated the old company. The corporate divestiture entity in the advanced world is very common, which is often used by companies to specialize in companies. The basic question is: what is the situation with business breakdown in current trade law, as well as the new bill on business law? In this regard, we should say that our legislator, contrary to the new bill on business law, is not in the trade law, not in the bill. The law of 1347 gave the institution no attention to its importance. Despite the silence of the current trade law, it can be said that the possibility of dividing a company is possible both in the current trade law and in the new trade law, and the difference is that the process of decomposition Companies in the new bill are more precise and transparent due to the company's decommissioning authority.
