
Review of Western Political Philosophy with Allame Ja'fari's Anthropological Approach

Ali Delshad Tavanaei Pishkhani*,

Abstract The main purpose of this research is to critique and review the political philosophy of the West with the anthropological approach of Allameh Ja'fari. In the view of Allame Ja'fari, the true meaning of human life is achieved through development and attainment of rational life; this is due to human knowledge and attention to His position as the axis of existence and the successor to God in the earth has a direct relationship. I am a human being, a lawful being that evolves by living on the basis of these laws and in harmony with the whole meaning of being. The origin of these laws and human forces is an ego that has more existential value in comparison to the natural being of man. Hence, the mere attention to the natural existence of man, deprives him of the attention to his transcendent existential capacities, since man, by acquiring the powers of the divine and spiritual, proceeds in the course of evolution and makes sense to his life. .
