

Compare the features of temperament and character, well-being and emotion regulation in women exposed to domestic violence and ordinary women.

Fatemeh yusefi*,

The purpose of this study was to compare normal women and women with domestic violence experience in terms of temperament and character traits, mental well-being and Emotion regulation. The method of this research was causal-comparative. The statistical population of this study was all married women in Rasht city. Based on this, using an available targeted sampling method, a sample of 75 women with domestic violence and 75 normal women were ed as samples. It should be noted that women exposed to domestic violence were all those who referred to the forensic medicine in Rasht and responded to questionnaires: temperament and character traits, mental well-being and Emotion regulation. The obtained data were analyzed by multivariate analysis of variance analysis. The results of this study showed that there are significant differences between the temperament and character traits, mental well-being and Emotion regulation of women exposed to domestic violence and normal women.
