Javid Fallah Ganjeh*,

Using a descriptive-analytical method along with documentary and field studies, this study analyzes the components of the Shiite geopolitical model in Iran's regional power strategy. The main objectives of this research are to identify the factors influencing Shiite geopolitical pattern in Iran's regional power strategy, explaining opportunities and opportunities. The threats are affecting the Shiite geopolitical model and presenting a model of the Shiite geopolitical pattern in Iran's regional power strategy. This thesis seeks to answer this question. What are the influential factors of Shiite geopolitical paradigm in Iran's regional power strategy? The results of the research show that the Islamic Revolution was one of the events that had profound and lasting effects on the Shiites of the world. Because of this influence of the relationship between the center and the periphery, the Shiite spaces around Iran, in the form of layers of periphery and semi-periphery, have been affected by developments in the center, mainly towards political participation and empowerment. The Shiites were inspired by the revolutionary spirit of the Iranian people during the Islamic Revolution. The revelation and discovery of their powerful identity moved towards role-playing in various socio-political fields. Due to global ideals and regional goals, the Islamic Revolution of Iran has influenced the awakening of the world's Muslims and the revival of religious beliefs; this influence is mainly seen in the increase of the awareness of Muslims, especially Shiite communities. In sum, the findings of the study suggest that, prior to the Islamic Revolution, Shiite power had remained potentially hidden. The Islamic Revolution provoked Shiites who, as a silent part of Islamic society, had no role in their writing and political structure of their countries. The advent of the Islamic Revolution not only reinforced the Shiites' sense of dignity and power, but also helped to transform them into an influential element in international and regional developments. Therefore, there are various factors influencing the Shiite geopolitical pattern and regional power strategy of Iran which can include religious ideology, positioning in the Middle East, climate and climate change, revival of the great divine civilization, updating the abilities and dignity of the Islamic world.
